Scoring and Interpretation Information

Scores range from 16 to 80 with higher scores indicative of higher levels of trait worry. Scores can be in the following severity ranges.

- 29 or less: Not anxious or a worrier

- 30-52: Bothered by worries but below clinical range for worry
- 52-65: Currently have some problems with worry and may benefit from treatment
- 66 or more: Chronic worrier and in need of treatment to target this problem

The raw score is also converted into three percentiles comparing the total score to three different samples:

- 1 - An adult community percentile showing the client's score in relation to the normal population.
- 2 - A social anxiety disorder percentile comparing the client's score with those with social anxiety.
- 3 - A GAD percentile comparing scores to people diagnosed with generalised anxiety disorder.

Percentiles are helpful in contextualising results compared to samples with known characteristics. Typically individuals with GAD will score around the 50th percentile (plus or minus 20) on the GAD percentile (which corresponds to higher percentiles on the other two percentiles).
